

Published: 08/20/68

Identification

nothing
K. J. Martin

Purpose

A command which does no execution except to return is provided to aid in timing tests. The time needed to execute this command is a minimum, thus aiding the interpretation of time needed to execute other commands.

Usage

The user types the command line:

nothing

Implementation

The nothing command returns to its caller; in this case, the shell.